

Alan Yeoman

Alan is now in his thirtieth year working in education. His career began in Argyll and Bute as a primary teacher and he soon moved on to a variety of promoted posts including Education Officer with responsibility for supporting ICT across the Local Authority with a particular focus on video conferencing and developing a Local Authority Intranet – one of the first of its kind in the UK.

This led to a permanent position with SCET – now Education Scotland – as a Development Adviser creating, delivering and evaluating staff development courses, co-managing a NOF programme across Scotland together with day to day delivery of the Masterclass and Leadership for Learning Projects.

Since leaving Education Scotland Alan has worked in the software industry as an Education Adviser and eight years ago set up his own Education Consultancy business working with education providers to develop their Professional Development portfolio with a focus on raising attainment, assessment and effective record keeping.
